Possible Hooks

Thief	The players have heard rumors of a thief in the night of this town. They have come to investigate.
Cult Activity	The players have heard rumors of a strange cult in the region. They come looking for clues.
Magical Mischief	The players have heard rumors of a strange wizard messing with the townsfolk, they come to find him.
Power Struggles	The local Baron is having a power struggle with the authorities. The Baron hires you to talk with the guard.
Gang Activity	Gangs of goblins have been sprouting out of nowhere. The kingdom has put out a wanted notice for each goblin slain.

Part 1: The Goobering Goblin

The ragged and shaggy town of Coastal Town has seen better days. The paths are mud-filled, and the rain has flooded the streets. Mismatched wood forms the buildings of this shanty village. The only light being from inside the cottages and in lanterns near them. Give a general description of the town before continuing to the boxed text below.

> As your party walks the mud-filled and ragged streets of the town, you encounter a building unlike the rest.
>
> It seems to be the only structure in the town with any semblance of hospitality. The rain pounds your face as you stare at the door.
>
> Suddenly, a woman bursts out, a deep red gash in her side. She lets out a blood curdling scream as she collapses onto the muddy path in front of your party. She begins gasping for air.
>
> The door is quickly shut behind her. It has the words "THE GOOBERING GOBLIN" etched into it.

If any of the players at this point choose to assist the villager, they will require a DC 10 medicine check to assess and heal the wound. She will remain unconscious but no longer dying.

If they choose to open the door, they will be greeted with a common area. In the far corner are three wood goblins, and one wood hobgoblin. A random assortment of villagers can be located within The Goobering Goblin at varying levels of intoxication.

Behind the bar are two tavern aids and the tavernkeeper himself. This large man seems beside himself with fear and is glancing at the group in the corner frequently.

The goblins are not hostile to the players, but they are not happy with their presence. They won't start combat unprovoked for now. If the players choose to roll perception checks, they may notice the bloodied knife stabbed into the section of the bar they're occupying.

The populous is very accepting of the party, regardless of composition or background, therefore the guests at The Goobering Goblin will gladly converse with the group and will even play games with a DC 10 charisma check.

Give time for the players to interact with their surroundings, fill the tavern with whatever knick-knacks and souvenirs as you please. Note that the goblin's corner is filled with trash, various amounts of gold, and a large amount of a yellowish ooze.

Eventually, the Hobgoblin will speak up. In broken common, he will ask the players their business and if they plan to leave anytime soon. He has his hand on his weapon, and his three goons quickly grab theirs. One of the goblins has a deep gash that cuts through its right eye. It seems to be the only one hesitating to grab its weapon.

They will give the players a few moments to leave. The bar's previous noise would come to a screeching halt as patrons evacuate or hide.

The tavernkeeper will quickly grab all mugs off the counter and duck underneath the bar. Give the players a few moments to decide what to do.

The Hobgoblin is open to negotiation and will take 1GP from each of the players in exchange to being allowed to stay. He will explain that the earlier woman simply didn't pay the fine, and that's how things are done around here.

If the players leave and return, the Hobgoblin will not warn them and instead will attack on sight.

If the Hobgoblin and his group are defeated (either by being killed or driven away), the tavernkeeper will reward the players with rooms for the duration of their stay, as well as drinks for the night.

Wood Goblins: Bright orange, bright yellow eyes, just as ugly. They are more calculated and speak common as well as other racial language.
Wood Hobgoblins: Like their cousins, are bright orange and bright yellow. These Hobgoblins can be seen munching on bits of wood as snacks. Also speak common as well as other racial languages and any granted by bonus intelligence.